Schneider Electric (energy management and automation for data centers, buildings, industry, and infrastructure)

Acquires

PTC (industrial design software, product lifecycle management, PLM, and industrial internet of things)

Deal

$22.6bn. Schneider is already a long-standing customer and partner of PTC. The transaction is financed, in part, by a new share issuance of €5 billion. Data centers, a high-growth segment for Schneider, consume control software, digital twin solutions, and PLM tools, which PTC precisely addresses.

Perspective

Schneider is not acquiring PTC to sell more hardware; it is acquiring PTC so that its hardware becomes inseparable from a software ecosystem it controls, substituting recurring revenues resilient to price competition for commoditizing equipment.

Emera (electricity and gas distribution and transmission in regulated markets, primarily in Florida)

Acquires

Canadian Utilities and ATCO (electricity and gas distribution and transmission in regulated markets, primarily in Alberta)

Perspective

What the merger truly buys is not diversification-it's borrowing capacity: a 95% regulated utility can raise debt at near-sovereign rates, making infrastructure projects financeable that neither could undertake alone.

AMD (manufacturing advanced processors for intensive artificial intelligence computing)

Acquires

World Labs

Deal

World Labs is co-founded by Fei-Fei Li, whose work on ImageNet was instrumental in the rise of deep learning. Following the transaction, she will join AMD as Executive Vice President and Chief Scientist, reporting directly to Lisa Su. Closing expected before the end of 2026.

Perspective

AMD is not acquiring technology but legitimacy: bringing Fei-Fei Li to the top of the organizational chart signals to the developer and laboratory ecosystem that AMD thinks about AI at its most fundamental level, not just as an alternative silicon provider.
